Warsaw Attempt to Break Strike Founders

By James M. Markham

New York Times Service WARSAW - The Polish anthorities Wednesday put out skeleton editions of several newspapers on military and other presses, but the half-hearted attempt to break amassive printers' strike foundered vien the labor action was seconded by distributors and vendors.

VIENNA — A Catholic news agency here said Wednesday that two priests had been arrested in a police drive against an "under-ground church" in Czechoslovakia. The Kathpress agency named the priests as Jaroslav Duka, 38, a Dominican friar in Pizen, and Josef Kordik, 33, a Jesuit father in Both Trybuna Ludu, the Communist Party daily, and Zolnierz Wolnosci, the hard-line organ of the Polish armed forces, were printed overnight on emergency military presses in Warsaw, but municipal, deliverers boycotted them and it was virtually impossible to find copies in kiosks in the capital.

At Trybuna Ludu's Warsaw offices, an editor reported that only 150,000 copies of the newspaper on better newsprint than usual but with sloopy printing defects - had been published, well short of the normal 1.1 million run. "In spite of the aims of the organizers of this action," declared a hopeful commentary on the trimmed-down, four-page daily, "these are not days without Trybuna Ludu." Finding copies of either Trybu-na Ludu or Zolnierz Wolnosci was a major challenge, and at the offic-es of the armed forces daily, guarded by a soldier, a woman kiosk vendor slipped a rare copy of the military newspaper from below ber display counter for a foreign customer. "Even the editors have been begging for them," she said.

"Who gave Solidarity the right to cut off the links between millions of readers and their national and local dailies?" asked Zolnierz Wolnosci in an indignant frontpage editorial. It accused the union "striking out blindly," and predicted that "tension in the country will grow again" because of the printers' action.

U.S. F-14s Down Pair Of Libyan Jet Fighters

Account By Tripoli Different

From Agency Dispatches
TRIPOLI, Libya — Libya said Wednesday that eight U.S. Navy planes fired on two Libyan jets while they were on a reconnaissance mission over the Mediter-ranen. A Libyan diplomat in London said the Libyan planes were sbot down. The Libyans said their planes were intercepted around 7 a.m. by eight American aircraft less than 30 miles from the Libyan coast in the Gulf of Sidra. The Libyan sto-ry differed from the U.S. an-nouncement, which mentioned two U.S. planes and said the incident took place 60 miles off the coast.

Quickly denied by the Pentagon was a Libyan news agency dispatch quoting a military spokes-man in Tripoli as saying that an American F-14 went down.

The Libyan news agency said in comment by its political editor that the "joint challenge thrown by the American administration and its agent, [Egyptian President Anwar] Sadat, in the region, exemplified by the maneuvers to be conducted by the American fleet and the Egyptian regime's land forces, is another link in the chain of imperialism, the search for war and aggression against the peoples and their freedom."

Pentagon Says Americans Were Attacked Over Sea

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON - Two U.S. Navy F-14 jet fighters shot down two Soviet-built Libyan jet fighters 60 miles off the Libyan coast early Wednesday following an unprovoked attack on the American planes, the Pentagon said.

The State Department protested to Libya and warned that any fur-ther attacks "will also be resisted with force if necessary."

One Libyan pilot was seen parachuting into the Mediterranean af-ter the minute-long engagement over the Gulf of Sidra. There were no injuries among the four U.S. crewmen involved, U.S. officials

The F-14 jets, assigned to the U.S. carrier Nimitz, downed the Libyan planes with heat-seeking missiles. The U.S. planes were engaged in previously announced naval exercises in international air space over international waters, a Defense Department statement said. The Libyans claim waters up to 200 miles off their coast. The United States protested the attack in a note routed through the Belgian government. The United States and Libya do not bave direct diplomatie relations.

The protest note said the "routine naval exercise ... in interna-tional waters ... had been announced on August 12 and 14 through notices to airmen and to mariners. Prior notification of air operations within the Tripoli light Information Region had also been given in accordance with these notifications.

The United States viewed "this unprovoked attack with grave concern," the note said, adding: "Any further attacks against U.S. forces operating in international water and airspace will also be resisted with force if necessary.

U.S. officials said the administration bas informed members of the United Nations Security Coun-cil through its president and also notified UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the incident. The officials said the United States may ask a Security Council meet-ing to denounce the Libyan action.

In Brussels, the United States informed a special meeting of the NATO Council of the incident. The Associated Press quoted a U.S. source there as saying the Reagan administration wanted to act quickly, partly to avoid allied criticism on the speed of informing NATO partners and "partly to relieve tensions."

President Reagan, who is vaca-tioning in California, was awak-ened at 4:24 a.m. and told of the incident. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We regret the attack that made it necessary to take the action," but repeated the U.S. position that the exercises were held in international waters.

Mr. Speakes called "absolutely untrue" a Newsweek magazine report this week that the 6th Fleet exercises were the Reagan administration's "first direct challenge" to Libya, partly intended to test Libyan leader Col. Moamer Qadhafi's reactions to U.S. maneuvers inside the territorial waters he claims.

Afghanistan Reverses Plan of Land Reform

Coe Sets Mark For Mile Run

ZURICH - Sebastian Coe, Britin's Olympic 1,500-meters cham-ion, set a world record for the tile here with a time of 3 minutes, 8.53 seconds Wednesday night, ut failed in an attempt to set a ew mark in the 1,500 meters.

forces," they will be given "priority in the redistribution of reclaimed land."

According to Western diplomats, the announcement of the decree represents a tacit crasing of the land policy which had never gained wide acceptance. In fact, along with culturally unacceptable policies of co-education, the land measures galvanized the conscrvatively Islamic countryside into active revolt.

Early in the land reform program, the urban activists had rushed into redistributing land but had failed to provide agricultural credit, seeds, or fertilizers, material that has tradionally been advanced by feudal landlords in barter and sharecropping deals.

Mecca Visas

Western diplomatic sources here said they interpreted the decree as also reflecting the continuing difficulties the Afghan government is having in recruiting troops. The diplomats report that press gangs have stepped up their activities in Kabul. Last week at least two young men were shot and killed on the street as they tried to run from forcible recruitment. Underage boys have been seized and these are apparantly the same boys who were referred to in the English language Kabul Times as very young men "who have been allowed to enlist because of their zeal."

The diplomatic sources said that once seized the recruits are reportedly quickly flown to other parts of the country where they are provided with what the diplomats said appeared to be rudimentary train-

Another radio annoucement this week appeared to be worded in a manner to appease the indignation of Moslems who have been unable to obtain visas for the pilgrimage to Mecca, which usually is made at this time of year. The radio said that since the Saudi Arabian Embassy withdrew its mission in April and broke diplomatic relations, no visas for the trip were available in Afghanistan. "The whole responsibility of this matter resis with the Arabia," the state radio declared.

In India the question of regional tension spreading in a ripple effect from Afghanistan was once again raised in Parliament where Prime Minister Indira Gandhi described the Pakistani and U.S. reactions to Afghanistan as "a very deliberate attempt to create tension in the

OPEC Ministers at Loggerheads, But Yamani Hints at $4 Saudi Rise

Saudi Arabia's Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani said be would not rule out the possibility of a $4 Saudi oil price rise from its current $32 as barrel. "You have to wait and see," he said. Conference sources said they believed there had been intense dip-lomatic pressure on the Saudis, possibly at head of state level, to go up to a new unified price of $36, the benchmark already used by the majority. The talks here were extended until Thursday. During the day the oil ministers appeared to make no progress in their talks. "The mountains are higher and the ravines deeper than we thought," said Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto, president of the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. After the mnrning session, Mana Said al-Otaiba, oil minister for the United Arab Emirates, said

Leftist Guerrillas in El Salvador Step Up Attacks on Government

By Christopher Dickey
Washington Post Service

SAN SALVADOR — With massive nationwide sabotage and a concerted offensive in northern Morazan province, leftist guerrillas have dramatically in-creased their attacks on the U.S.-backed government here in recent weeks. Although the fighting does not approach the level of conflict during the left's disastrous January "final offensive," when large-scale confrontations were briefly initiated throughout the country in an effort to present the new Reagan administration with an "irreversible military situation," the insurgents appear intent on accomplishing two goals.

The first is to consolidate, defend and expand their traditional strongholds in the mountainous north of the country near the Honduran border.

New Tactics

Leftist diplomatic sources in the Central American region say they expect that if the guerrillas are able to accomplish this, one or more Latin American and European governments will recognize a "state of insurgency" in El Salvador in the next few weeks, something the left bopes would compromise the prestige and authority of the ruling military-civilian coalition.

Over the last several weeks the guerrillas have changed their tactic of fading away when large government forces its to confront them. On the Guazapa

Morazan, the guerrillas are digging in for a fight. Guazapa still remains in their hands, and conflicting reports are coming out of Morazan about the fate of the village of Perquin, a few miles north of the regional capital of San Francisco Gotera. Broadcasts over the guerrillas' "Radio Venceremos" continued to claim Tuesday that Perquin is in insurgent hands and that more than 30 government soldiers have been tak-

Spokesmen for the government military, however, say Perquin has been retaken and there are no prisoners. Reporters attempting to reach the scene have not been allowed to proceed past government roadblocks.

The second focus of guerrilla activity has been on the nation's electric power system. The insurgents since then they have concentrated, with devastating effect, on destroying major power lines. In an address to the nation Monday, President Jose Napoleon Duarte said the departments of San Miguel, La Union, Morazan and part of La Paz are now without electricity. For most of Monday large sections of the capital also were blacked out after guerrillas dynamited five towers on San Salvador volcano failed earlier this summer to seize and destroy major bydroelectric plants near the town of Arcatao, but

Losses to businesses as a result of the power cuts are estimated to be millions of dollars. In a speech to a group of Salvadoran industrialists overlooking the city.

Monday, U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton outlined the extent of the damage caused by the guerrillas' offensive against the economy. Over the last three years, Mr. Hinton said, the gross national product has declined by more than 16 per-cent. He estimated that capital flight since 1978 will reach $625 million by the end of this year. Imports have declined by 40 percent in real terms, he said, and if one looks only at non-petroleum imports, the de-cline is "an incredible 52.3 percent." U.S. economic aid has increased from $10 million in 1978 to $136 million this year, Mr. Hinton said. But he concluded that under the present circum-stances, "with total frankness, I have to say our aid has just prevented things from being worse than they Officials of the Reagan administration have said they will not allow a leftist military victory in El Salvador. The Salvadoran government and the United States are hoping that elections scheduled for March will help cool political tensions, and Mr. Hinton has been courting private sector leaders in hopes that they will begin investing in the country and helping the battered economy recuperate.

Woman Attorney Slain

SAN SALVADOR (LAT) - Rosa Judith Cisneros, a 42-year-old attorney who was one of El Salvador's best known women, was killed by gunmen.

She was leaving ber house in a northern suburb of San Salvador Tuesday morning when a carload of men halted her and dragged ber to their car. An eyewitness saw her trying to talk to them, perhaps in reason with them. Then be saw them make her lean against the car, lay her hands on it, and beard a burst of submachine gun fire.

She fell to the ground, wounded, and they started to leave. But she struggled to rise, and one of the men turned back and fired three shots point-blank into her face. Then they drove away.

The gunmen did not identify themselves, nor did any group take responsibility for the killing.

Ms. Cisneros was legal adviser to the Salvadoran Communal Union, an organization of campesinos. Rodolfo Viera, a leader of the union, was murdered here in January along with two U.S. labor advisers.Two wealthy right-wingers have been accused of plotting those killings.

She also was director of the Salvadoran Demographic Association, which emphasises family planning and works for women's rights. Although it was not publicized, the United States, through its aid program to El Salvador, provided most of the associauon's financing.

Rightist gunmen may have killed her because of her campesino connections, one expert said, or the gun-men may have been leftists opposed to U.S.-support-

On June 8, bowever, the day after the Israeli raid, when the administration feared that the Arab world would turn against the Unit-ment that "condemns" the Israeli air strike. The department spokes-man also said the United States had "no evidence" that Iraq was planning to build nuclear weap-

in character.

However, the administration found that the reaction of the Arab world to the Israeli attack was unexpectedly mild. This reduced pressure on Washington to do more than join in a United Nations Security Council resolution that condemned the Israeli attack. Mr. Haig sent an aide, Robert

C. McFarlane, to Israel to meet with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, and, on July 13, a joint statement was issued that said "misunderstandings" arising from the raid had been "clarified to the satisfaction of both sides." On the basis of that vague statement, the administration's plan was to lift the suspension on July 17, but Mr. Begin upset that schedule by launching the attack on Beirut that day.

That prolonged the suspension for another month because of the need to achieve a new cease-fire in Lebanon and because the administration did not want to embarrass President Anwar Sadat of Egypt by releasing the planes at the time of his visit to the United States earlier this month.

One high-ranking U.S. official said that the administration decided on what he called "the minimal option" — to say and do as little as possible about the Israeli raid. He said that the mood in Congress was against punishing Israel be-yond the two-month plane delay.

Self-Rule Talks

The decision was made instead to eliminate the Baghdad raid as an issue between Mr. Reagan and Mr. Begin. Some officials had suggested maintaining the suspension of the aircraft delivery until Mr. Begin arrived on Sept. 8 for his first telks with Mr. Reagan.

But that was vetoed on the grounds that the Begin visit should be devoted to seeking ways of reviving the negotiations leading to self-rule for the Palestinians and on longer-range Middle East is-

WASHINGTON - Moscow is buying com again, New Delhi is a surprise buyer of wheat and prom-ising new trade contacts have been made with Peking. Export sales of U.S. agricultural products this year are expected to run near $46 hil-

In farm country, on Capitol Hill and around the Reagan administration, that's good news. But while the administration is promoting agricultural sales abroad, it is cutting back the long-standing Food for Peace program, which helps developing countries buy the same farm products through longing products through low-interest loans. And for millions of starving and malnonrished people around the world, as well as their advocates in the United States, that's bad news.

Meanwhile, there is another unsettling question in the minds of many food experts: Is it wise for the United States to direct its farm policy toward expansion of markets when American land is already being worked at full capaci-ty, demanding heavy use of energy and fertilizer?

Experts Testify

In three days of House Agriculture Committee hearings late last month on global hunger and the effect of U.S. policy on the prob-lem, some of the country's best-known food and feeding experts testified — among them scientist Norman Borlang, Tufts University president and nutritionist Jean grow their own for Mayer, Lester Brown of Grigg executive vi Worldwatch Institute and writer Save the Children

Frances Moore Lappe.
Few House members heard them, however, because most of them were attending budget reconchiation meetings, debating how deeply federal spending on farm programs should be slashed.

The irony did not escape Rep. Dan Glickman, Democrat of Kan-sas: Apologizing to Mr. Mayer for the commutee's distraction down the hall, he said: "We are deciding how much we are going to cut the agricultural support programs [but] if U.S. farmers can't make it, the would is in terrible trouble."

Idea Is Supported

In a way, it was as if the Congress and its witnesses were on dif-ferent - wavelengths. Throughout the hearings, the witnesses repeated a similar theme — that the administration's emphasis on ex-panded U.S. farm exports runs counter to a greater need for help-ing developing nations build their own agricultural bases.

Spokesmen for Save the Chil-dren Foundation, CARE, the Mennonite Central Committee and other private voluntary groups that assist with feeding programs around the world stressed that the year 2000, it appears increasingly clear that U.S. farms will not

"We feel the best contribution you can make is go into a commu-nity or village and teach people to theme kept echoing. Variations of the theme included questions such grow their own food," said Ernest Grigg, executive vice president of

· Should U.S. soil, water and energy continue to be expended on growing of more farm commodities that sell at less than the cost of production?

 Does the U.S. policy of promoting farm sales abroad actually discourage developing nations from building their own agricultureffort," said Edgar Stoesz of the al base?

• Is it prudent for the United States, now sending 40 percent of its harvest abroad, to continue to supply the world with grain that is used in large part to produce meat rather than in direct human consumption?

• Will intensified exports, relying on large-scale production techniques and high-cost machinery, drive more nails in the coffin of the diminishing American family

The answers in large part will have to be provided by Congress, although the pending 1981 farm bills do not confront the questions. Paradoxically, perhaps, Agricul-ture Secretary John R. Block, a leading advocate of the administration's policy favoring increased exports, acknowledged in his testimony that some of these questions exist, cautioning that food-poor nations must take more responsibility in developing their agricul-tural systems.

He told Rep. Frederick W. Richmond, a New York Democrat, that "the United States alone cannot begin to meet the world's demands for food; others will have to increase their production capacity ... and we will have to see higher rices for our own commodities. When prices are higher, people fig-ure out how to do it fraise their

Bot Mr. Mayer, among others, complained that U.S. policy is oot sufficiently directed toward stimulating low-income countries to build their own farm base. And, he and other witnesses added, it is time that Congress and the administration begin to pay more atten-tion to the American farm base.

"We are reaching a danger level in the number of people practicing our major industry . . . The in-come of our farmers has to be sustained and we have to have more farmers than we need at the minimum. We have to give more glam-our to agriculture because we are now bucking 2,000 years of depreciation of agriculture."

Mr. Mayer added, "This committee has a chance to play a unique role in developing a major component in foreign policy — a new North-South policy for agriculture and food."

The message did not get very far. As he spoke, the committee room was nearly empty.

Gray Davis, Gov. Edmund G. California has been waging a 14-month battle against the Mediterranean fruit fly, which can attack more than 200 varieties of fruits and vegetables. Although the state has sprayed more than 700 square miles (1,120 square kilometers) with the insecticide malathion, imposed quaran-tines and spent $56 million to fight the insect, the fly infestation has continued to spread. Last week, it was discovered in the state's richest agricultural district.

Brown Comments

Mr. Brown said he had talked with Mr. Okawara by telephone in Washington. "I asked him to defer the quarantine until the appropri-ate Japanese scientists could meet with the American scientists to evaluate this problem, and hopefully have them come to California to examine the problem first hand," the governor said.

The California governor said that the ambassador had expressed the coocern of Japanese scientists that the infestation could spread to Japan through shipments of California produce. California last year shipped $118.5 million in fresh produce to Japan.

"I replied that the state is taking prompt action and that the matter is well in hand," Mr. Brown said. It makes no sense to quarantine the areas far from the infestation." Mr. Brown also said that he had diplomatically suggested to Mr. Okawara that an embargo on California fruit might result in retalia-tion by the California Legislature.

"The way I put it," Mr. Brown said, "is that I value the close relationship between California and Japan and any quarantine not based on scientific evidence would act as a negative factor in our relationship."

"California is the first stop for Japanese tourists," he said, "and Japan is our No. I trading partner. There are strong and growing ties between Calfiornia and Japan, and based on that, I nrged the ambassador to limit any quarantine to the area of infestation as the state and federal scientists are doing."

tween the professed sophisticate and intellectual H.L. Mencken and a mindless blonde, became a minor American classic.

The book, published in 1925, ran through 85 editions and translations into 14 languages, including Chinese. It became a popular play, often revived, and the basis for two movies and a couple of musical comedies. The book's central character, Lorelei Lee, quickly became fixed as the archetypal vamp keen on material values.

Pithy Manner

Almost a quarter-century after the book's publication, it was turned into a musical. Opening in December 1949, with Carol Channing, it ran for almost two years. A film version in 1953 starred Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell. An earlier movie version, not a musical, featured Alice White and Ruth Taylor.

When Miss Loos wrote "Gentle-men Prefer Blondes," she already had a formidable reputation as a witty screenwriter and as a person who could more than hold her own among the reigning wits. She was a friend of Mencken; George Jean Nathan, the drama critic; Ernest Boyd, the Irish essayist; Joseph Hergesheimer, the novelist; and Tallulah Bankhead, the actress, to mention a few of her companions.

In films, Miss Loos's career went back to 1912, when she wrote for D.W. Griffith at American Biograph. She did screenplays for such stars as Mary Pickford, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Douglas Fairhanks, Mae Marsh, Francis X. Bushman and Constance Talmadge.

One of her father's many jobs was operating a small theatrical paper in San Francisco, and he put his daughter on the stage in "May Blossom," which was directed by David Belasco. The child's success led to other parts, including a role in the American premiere of "A Doll's House." Her wages eventually kept the family afloat.

Urge to Write

By the time she was 10 and living in Los Angeles, she was ap-pearing in comedy sketches offered as a supplement to movie one-reelers. She soon developed an urge to write, and at 13 she began to sell humorous anecdotes to the old New York Morning Telegraph, a theatrical oewspaper.

Watching films, Miss Loos realized that they were based on written plot outlines, so she devised one and hailed it to the American Biograph Co. in New York, Signed "A. Loos" and called "The New York Hat," the scenario was bought for $25. It was produced in 1912 with Griffith directing and Mary Pickford and Lionel Barrymore as co-stars.

When she was almost 20, she met Griffith and was hired as a screenwriter. In association with the director John Emerson, who became her second husband, she worked on such notable silents as "A Virtuous Vamp," "The Perfect Woman," "Dangerous Business and "Learning to Love.

Miss Loos wrote two Broadway comedies, "The Whole Town's Talking" and "The Fall of Eve," Then came "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" and international fame.

Thereafter Miss Loos wrote or adapted for Hollywood such films as "Susan and God," "They Met in Bombay," "When Ladies Meet," "Blossoms in the Dust," and "l Married an Angel."

Turning Point in Poland

The one-year-old Polish revolution bas reached a turning point. Unlike the Czechs in 1968, the Poles succeeded in holding a party congress with liberalized procedures - procedures, some would argue, that strike at the beart of the fundamental Leninist principle of democratic centralism. Party Chief Stanislaw Kania and his team emerged from the congress pretty much unscathed. Then the Polish leader went off to the Crimea for a ritual banding down of the law by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev. He returned to Warsaw with what appears to be the Soviet equivalent of a debt rescheduling in hand and only a veiled threat of intervention by fraternal forces if matters get worse. It would be excessive to suggest that Mr. Kania scored a triumph in the Crimea, but he seems to have made it home in one piece.

The Soviet Union may bave decided, for the moment at least, that the best choice short of invasion is to prop up Mr. Kania's government. For Mr. Kania, the only sensible course is to keep the increasingly militant Solidarity in line by the gentle arts of coercion and persuasion. And for Solidarity, which now is tantamount to saying the Polish people, it has become evident that no amount of protest will put meat on the butcher-shop shelves. Therefore, the union is beginning to press its more political objectives - an end to most censorship plus more access to the government-owned press; worker self-management, and democratization of the parliament and local councils. On returning to Warsaw, Mr. Kania confronted an immediate challenge from Solidarity, which over the last year has become a powerful force in the country from the factory floor to the inner circles of the party. Widespread food strikes were threatened, but Mr. Kania, with the help of Solidarity's national leadership, defused them. This was less a victory for Mr. Kania, though, than a wise, tactical retreat by Solidarity, which recognized that the battle for more food could not be won by strikes or demonstrations. In-stead, the union has sbut down the country's newspapers. Those papers that are being printed, on military presses, cannot be distributed. And those few that are being circulated are not being read. The press strike is a direct attack on a key instrument of Communist Party power. Such an attack was once thought impossible in a Soviet-bloc country. But Solidarity bas changed all that.

The union is also demanding a loud voice in the choice of industrial managers. That would affect the party's authority to assign loyal members to sensitive posts — such as the directorship of the national airline - and would dilute its ability to centrally manage the economy. Solidarity is also seeking further democratization of Poland's local and national political institutions, which would strike still another blow at party control. Solidarity may win some concessions in these areas, but the risks are substantial. For example, if the Soviet Union concludes that reform has gone too far, it might decide to undermine Solidarity by sabotaging the already staggering Polish economy.

Meanwhile, Western bankers and politicians watch from the sidelines, examining the Polish debt of twenty some odd billion dollars. The bankers want guarantees that they will be repaid and the politicians are looking for ways to help the Poles. West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has suggested that Poland might apply to rejoin the International Monetary Fund, to which it belonged before Comecon was founded. Since the IMF could monitor the Polish economy, membership might encourage favorable debt rescheduling and new loans. It would hardly be a panacea for Po-land's ills; and the Soviet Union might not permit it; but if the Poles should seek membership in the Fund, their application should certainly be sympathetically received.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

The Reagan administration's economists suggest that next year's deficit currently looks as though it will be over $60 billion. That's a remarkable increase from the administration's $42.5 billion estimate only a month ago. Should you be shocked and dismayed? Should you conclude that the federal budget has once again suddenly veered wildly out of control?

No. Strange and unpredictable things sometimes happen to the federal budget, but the abrupt escalation of the 1982 budget estimate this summer is not - repeat, is not one of them. Last March, when the Reagan budget first appeared, the Congressional Budget Office warned that it underestimated next year's spending by more than $20 billion. Nobody really doubted that the CBO was correct, but, in the politics of the budget process through the spring, it suited hardly anyone's purpose to say so. The Democratic opposition knew a higher deficit figure would only create more pressure for cutting the social programs. The administration and its congressional allies knew that a higher deficit figure would only threaten the support for the president's tax bill. There emerged a sort of tacit agreement to stick with the lower numbers, however unrealistic. But now the tax bill has been signed into law, Congress has left town, and the administration finds it a convenient moment to go back and pick up that $20 billion understatement. In September, Congress votes its second budget resolution, in which the deficit figure becomes a legally binding limit. If it's too low, it could generate endless vexation for the White House.

Where does the $20 billion discrepancy come from? As the administration accurately explains, much of it is created by the continuation of very high interest rates. The president expected a sharp drop in rates earlier this year; the CBO did not expect it nor, for that matter, did the Senate Budget Committee. Higher interest costs will make up nearly half of that $20 billion. The rest? Tax revenues will probably run a bit low because of slow growth of the economy. There have also been some miscalculations in the costs of

The deficit of President Carter's 1980 budget was $60 billion. This year's deficit will be nearly as much. And now it appears likely that the deficit in Mr. Reagan's 1982 budget will be about the same. Perhap you will find that disappointing, or alarming. But it's not a surprise.

How Far Can a Medfly Fly?

Every time California bug killers think they have the pesky Mediterranean fruit fly cornered, it escapes to infect a new area.

New infestations have been found outside the zone of aerial spraying near San Francisco, and now more have been found across the mountains in the lush San Joaquin Valley. No natural barriers remain to impede the Medfly's ruinous progress.

Japan has already announced that it will not accept California produce without fumigation or cold treatment to kill off the larvae, and other nations may follow suit. Can nothing be done to stop this clusive and voracious insect?

The chief problem at this point is people - careless, stupid, defiant people. On its own power, the Medfly can't fly very far. But it buries its eggs inside fruit and vegetables that are carried far and wide by the public.

The coastal counties which the Medfly first infiltrated are primarily suburban, filled with scattered, small holdings of fruit trees. The fruit was supposed to have been stripped and destroyed long ago. There were repeated warnings not to remove it from the quarantined areas. Roadblocks bave even been set up to deter and catch offenders.

But many people ignore the warnings, sure that they can tell whether a fruit or vegetable is infected. And others, irritated by long waits, find ways around the roadblocks and defiantly wave their fruit at the harassed, belpless inspectors.

Still the new outbreaks do not necessarily mean that the war is lost. The infestation just found in the San Joaquin Valley may be easier to contain than the coastal outbreak. It was detected at an earlier stage, in a rural area that is highly motivated toward insect control and less concerned about the alleged dangers of aerial spraying. A cold winter could also greatly assist the campaign by killing off most of the flies in their pupal stage

Eradication of any insect is extremely difficult, but there have been successful campaigns against the Medfly in Florida, Texas, and Southern California. The California campaign admittedly got off to an erratic

There is a strong likelihood that some of the flies supposedly sterilized in Peru to interfere with the Medfly's mating turned out not to be sterile after all. They may account for the latest infestations. But California authorities appear to have their campaign geared up. What they most need now is public cooperation.

Mideast Guest Workers: Looking Ahead

By Jonathan Power

ONDON -- In the days of the empire, the British used to pluck labor from the Indian subcontinent and send it to build rail-ways in East Africa or cut sugar on the colonial plantations of the West Indies. Their descendants are still there as businessmen and shopkeepers, often at odds with the bost government which on occasion — as in the case of ldi Amin's Uganda — unceremoniously boot them out.

A similar tide of migrant workers is today pouring out of Asia into the booming economies of the Middle East. The jobs are not too different from their forefathers' and their position in the societies they are going to inhabit as precarious. Only this time, proportionately, the numbers are far larger ately, the numbers are far larger and the potential for conflict therefore increased.

For the moment, however, no one appears to be looking ahead. The short-term advantages are too manifest. Indeed, it seems more than natural that this flow should continue to grow. The six large oilexporting countries, of Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Libya, Kuwait, Iraq and the United Arab Emirates, have a population density of only five persons to a square kllometer, 25 million people in an area of less than 5 million square kilometers.

Clean the Streets

Africa and Asia on the other hand have a combined population of over 1 billion tightly packed into 24 million square kilometers. Even in pre-oil boom days, labor came into the Middle East from Egypt, Jordan, the Yemen, Pakistan, India, Somalia, Bangladesh, the Philippines and South Korea.

In 1973, there were less than half a million foreign workers. Today there are 2.5 million and their numbers are growing. Not only do they build the roads and bridges, construct the shiny new offices and botels, service the hospitals and schools, and, of course, clean the streets and pick up the gar-bage, but they have established networks of economic activity that reach back to the poor villages back home.

There is now an active local market in the Middle East for Bengali Lungis and Filipino Barongs, not to mention the more serious business of transport equipment from India, ships and power generators from South Korea, machine tools and electrical machinery from Pakistan.

Shahid Javed Burki, of the World Bank, who has made a special study of this migrant traffic, argues in a recent issue of the magazine. South, that "One of the important consequences of the oil boom in the Middle East would be to remove the worst poverty for many low-income developing

Is it really as positive a process as he suggests? At first glance, his figures look persuasive. For the very poor countries (those with incomes per head of less than $400). the cost of imported oil increased from $600 million in 1973 to $3.3 billion in 1980.

Increases Seen

Meanwhile, the remittances from emigrant workers rose from $600 milling to $3 billion. In sum, they have met 90 percent of their increased oil bill. Mr Burki foresees the Middle East countries increasing the work force by 10 percent a year, reaching 6 million by 1990 and thus meeting comfortably any expected rise in the oil bill.

This is a beguiling argument and one that many senior economists, bankers and political figures in the West have echoed. Yet it is a house built on sand, as a new report "Se-curity in the Persian Gulf" by the International Institute for Strategic Studies suggests. 'The effect of large numbers of [Arab] youth being awash in a sea of aliens has been in leave them confused and disorientated as to the ultimate source of administration and authority in the country."

The report paints a worrying picture of immigrant workers in some states making up half the

The two-world problem is compounded by the radical political tradition of many of the immigrants — the Palestinians, the Yemenis, the Somalians, and even the Egyptians.

Resentment

Like immigrant workers in Europe and the United States, the Middle East workers suffer from discrimination and resentment. They inhabit the poorer bousing, moment, however long they stay, of having their children migrate upwards into citizenship and professional jobs. They are hired as proletarians and the policies of the receiving countries dictated that, unless there are profound reforms, proletarians they are meant to re-

It seems inevitable, over time, that in spite of their earning capacity in the aggregate, they will focus on their own ethnic and individual grievances and thwarted expectations. Political disturbances are more than likely.

There is a dangerous papering

The immigrants' bome countries, too often incapable of putting their own rural house in order and obsessed with balance of payments problems, are too glad to ex-over the cracks in the Middle East. The OPEC countries feel they need labor if they are to grow and absorb their wealth, they feel too that the remittances of migrants compensate for their still inadequate aid programs.

Regulation: Mother of Invention?

By Ruth Ruttenberg

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration has embraced a view that measures government regulation only as a burden. There is a wealth of empirical evidence, bowever, that regula-tion is itself a major stimulus for new markets, new jobs and — most important — innovation. To a surprising degree, regulation is the mother of invention.

Pollution control is one of the fastest growing markets in U.S. in-dustry. In-house corporate bteraproducts and processes developed in response to regulation contrasts sharply with public-relations advertising bemoaning the burdens of the same regulation.

Union Carbide Corp.'s 1978 annual report, for example, boasts of company leadership in municipal wastewater-treatment systems, which the federal government has helped ensure by budgeting $24 billion for them over a single four-year period. Union Carbide also says proudly that "increasing application of mandatory govern-ment standards has significantly increased air-pollution-control markets during the last five years."

Success Story American Cyanamid Co's. 1978 annual report contained a similar success story: Growth in sales of organic flocculants (wooly fibers) was due in large measure to pollution-control regulations. Stauffer Chemical Co. told its shareholders in 1979 that, over the long term, the opportunities offered by government regulations may be more important than the constraints they present. The 3M Corp. is well known for its growing line of respirators and other protective equipment for workers. Innovations spawned by regula-tion can increase overall produc-tivity. A good case in point is vinyl chloride. Though industry had threatened that regulation could cause the collapse of the entire vi-nyl-chloride industry, within 18 mouths of the promulgation of an Occupational Safety and Health cupational Salety and Administration regulation for that substance more than 90 percent of producing firms were in compliance. New firms were entering the market, and growth rates were more than twice the national aver-

Cleaner Air

Vinyl chloride is by no means the only example of compliance accompanied by productivity improvements and industry growth. At Kaiser Steel Corp.'s pipe mill in Fontana, Calif., workers were getting bad cuts from an old saw. The new, safer saw not only protected workers, it also saved wear and tear on tools. When shipping coal by rail across country, Conoco left behind trails of coal dust until a new device was developed to keep coal dust out of the environment. It also saves an estimated 80 tons of coal per trainload. Increases in productivity can come from such simple processes as improved abatement consume not only un-necessary dollars but extravagant amounts of energy as well. Reality belies such pessimism. When General Motors was forced to control pollution, its engineers designed powerhouse boilers that monitor emissions and set air-fuel ratios. Not only was the air that workers breathed cleaner, but the maized to boot. Ingersoil-Rand Co.'s California pellet mill is creating a new energy supply by converting organic waste into compacted, sulfur-free fuel pellets.

Companies are also making money from the large, fast-growing market for substitute products. Even though industry reacted with loud dismay when the government tried to regulate asbestos because of its carcinogenic effects, U.S. industrial ingenuity has risen to the occasion. Monsanto Co. has a new fire-retardant, Phos-Chek, to replace asbestos fireproofing. Kennecott Corp s new Fiberfrax is used not only in protective clothing, welding curtains and expansion joints but also as a furnace liner, where it reduces fuel consumption by as much as 50 percent and boosts productivity by shortening the production cycle. Du Pout has developed Nomex, a fiber that serves as an asbestos substitute, and is useful in protective apparel. Honeycomb structures of Nomex paper are used to strengthen interior cabin panels in aircraft, where weight-saving and flame-resistance are important. Regulation has improved the market for all these products.

Expensive

To be sure, regulation increases costs in some cases. For some firms, improving workplace safety and health may be an expensive process requiring outlays for new and improved plant and equipment. One should not suggest that the job is always easy to accom-plish or afford. But there are innumerable cases in which regulation also spawns far-flung bene-fits: basic innovations, jobs, productivity gains, energy savings, new markets and profits. In an in-creasing number of cases, regula-tion has spurred technological innovation that has increased profits while promoting the health of U.S. workers and U.S. industry.

Dr. Denton Cooley, who may supervise more than 25 heart operations in a day, prepares to leave one of the surgery rooms at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital.

The Artificial Heart: Latest Chapter Adding To Transplant Debate

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Denton Cooley is a tall, handsome Texan who slices open numan hearts to the sound of country music. He is a skilled surgeon, a man of enormous ego who built the Texas Heart Institute in Houston through the sheer force of his personality. He moves in the world of high-stakes medi-cine, and sometimes that gets him in trouble.

On July 23, Dr. Cooley performed a triple bypass operation on a 36-year-old man named Willibords A. Meuffels. A short time later, Mr. Meuffels had a heart attack. Attendants rushed him back to the operating room, mas-saging his heart as they rolled him along the halls of St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital.

Dr. Cooley, believing his patient faced ceriain death, implanted an artificial heart. For 34 bours, the plastic heart, powered by a large electrical console nearby, kept pumping until Dr. Cooley could find a human heart donor. That occurred on July 26.

At 8 a.m. on Aug 2, Mr. Meuffels died, his body overwhelmed by bacteria. Almost immediately thereafter came the operations for Dr.

diately thereafter came the questions for Dr. Cooley, including some from the U.S. govern-

No one challenges Dr. Cooley's medical judgment, made with very little time for consideration in the operating room. His patient would have died without the artificial heart. "If he had not implanted the device, they'd have pulled up the sheet and walked away," said Gregg C. Waddill, associate administrator and counsel at St. Luke's.

But there are questions about the artificial heart that was used and the way Dr. Cooley had prepared the medical world for its use. How had the beart been tested? Should Dr. Cooley have cleared its use with the Food and Drug Administration in Washington? Was the operation worth the risk? Will it affect future development and use of artificial hearts?

The FDA, suggesting that Dr. Cooley violated federal regulations, has informed him that he must receive its approval before using another artificial heart, and the agency wants a full report within 30 days on the details of the operation last month, although FDA officials made clear they are not seeking a confronta-tion with the prestigious Dr. Cooley.

Opposing Versions

Hospital officials say Dr. Cooley violated no federal regulations and details of the heart's testing have been documented to the FDA. The FDA disputes that claim. "We don't have any information," said Wayne Pines, associate commissioner for public affairs. "To the best of my knowledge, the hospital has never submitted anything to us in writing on that particular artificial heart." Publicity surrounding the incident, and the fact that the patient died so soon after the operation, are reasons why Dr. Cooley's latest gamble may prove costly.

"It's the sort of thing you can get zway with once," said Dr. Phillip Oyer of Stanford Uni-versity Medical Center. "Now he'll have to go through all the boops."

The Houston incident is the latest chapter in the checkered history of heart transplant operations, which began in glory and great antici-pation in 1967 when Dr. Christiaan Barnard performed the first one on a South African arocer. Immediately the medical world embraced the transplant as the solution to many serious heart ailments, and almost as quickly soured on the operation because so many patients died so soon of post-operative problems, the most troublesome being infection and reiction of the new heart.

At the Texas Medical Center in Houston,
Dr. Cooley and his former mentor and now tival, Dr. Michael DeBakey, were among the surgeons who gave up on the procedure. Dr. DeBakey performed 12 operations over an 18-month period, then stopped in early 1970. "He just discontinued the program because he said the results did not justify the effort that went into them," said Gayle McNutt, a spokesman for the Baylor College of Medicine in Hous-

The heart transplant program at St. Luke's Hospital began on May 3, 1968, and ended in September, 1969. "Most of the patients died within a few weeks or a few months," said Hazel Haby of St. Luke's. Until last month, Dr. Cooley had performed only one transplant since 1969. That was in 1978. His patient lived only two weeks. In 1977, heart transplants were in such dis-favor that the American College of Surgeons was forced to discontinue its register of operations. At that time, 346 operations had been performed worldwide on 338 patients. Only 77 were still alive.

Plugging Along

Throughout those years, however, a team of surgeons and researchers at Stanford University, under the direction of Dr. Norman E. nmway, continued to make steady progress, especially in solving the post-operative complications. Dr. Shunway, who in contrast to Dr. Cooley and Dr. DeBakey maintained a low public profile, gradually increased the chances of long-term survival and rebuilt the stature of transplants in the eyes of the public and many

"His experiments preceded by 10 years the first historic transplant," said Spyros Andreopoulos, a Stanford spokesman. "By the time human transplants began, Shumway had refined surgical techniques, had studied the performance of the heart and had methods and techniques. techniques for treating infection. This ac-counts for fact that he has succeeded when others failed."

Dr. Shumway's success in fighting infection is especially significant. It resulted both from close monitoring of his patients and from the development of techniques for early sampling of transplanted tissues to see if infection is be-

Another thing that has made Dr. Shumway successful is his selectivity. About 400 patients are referred to Stanford each year, and their records are reviewed by a team of doctors and researchers for certain criteria. The criteria in-clude being under 55, in good health except for the heart, and having a form of hear: disease for which there is no treatment other than transplant and which is likely to lead to death within six months without a transplant.

Of the 400 cases referred, about 60 patients are invited to Stanford for further evaluation, and of those about 40 are selected. The medical center performs 25 to 30 heart transplants a year. The other patients usually die before a donor can be found. Dr. Shumway and his team have performed 281 transplants since 1968, with survival rates of about 65 percent after one year, 40 percent after five. William Van Buren of Mill Valley, Calif., has lived 11

"Improved results and refined techniques have kindled a resurgence of interest in cardiac transplantation and six to 10 more cardiac centers in the United States are endeavoring to utilize this form of therapy," wrote Dr. Richard R. Lower and two other physicians in a journal of the American Heart Association. Dr. Lower, a former colleague of Dr. Shumway, heads the transplant program at the Medical College of Virginia.

Lack of Donors

Artificial hearts overcome a problem that has plagued transplant programs — the lack of donors. Such hearts have been under develop-ment for years, but to date they have not been cleared for use, which is why Dr. Cooley's operation last month raised eyebrows.

The July operation was Dr. Cooley's second attempt to use an artificial heart. In 1969, he implanted one in Haskell Karp and then went on television with Mr. Karp's wife to appeal for a donor of a human heart. The artificial heart worked for 65 hours before the transplant operation, but Mr. Karp died 36 hours after the transplant. Dr. Cooley was sued for malpractice, and the episode led to a split between Dr. Cooley and his mentor, Dr. DeBakey, setting back the development of artificial Until Dr. Cooley surprised the medical world with his latest operation, most attention was focused on the University of Utah, where a team has developed an artificial heart, tested it extensively c1 calves and applied to the FDA for permission to use it. The FDA has asked for more information.

The Utah team intends its use not as temporary but as a permanent replacement for a patient's damaged heart. At present the artificial heart requires a large power source, but within a few years researchers at Utah hope to develop a portable power source, and eventually the power source will be implanted in the body. Whether Dr. Cooley's use of the artificial heart was a success or failure is debated within the medical profession. Dr. Cooley, who would not consent to an interview, has said the plastic heart performed perfectly.

Other physicians, asking not to be quoted, say the success of an operation like that is determined by whether the patient lives. In any case, the operation has put Denton Cooley back in the public eye, an arena he is accus-

Fliess Letters Lead Parade of New Data Reopening Freud's Psyche for Analysis

By Ralph Blumenthal

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Sigmund Freud is undergoing re-analysis. Nearly a century after he produced a key to the secrets of the human psyche, scholars are focusing growing atten-tion on some of the enigmas that still obscure the personal and professional life of the founder of psychoanalysis.

These include the evolution of his crinical theory of infantile sexuality, his long "bondage" to a quixotic visionary who became his elosest confidant and his relationship to his parents and other family members.

"They are looking for secrets," says Anna Freud, his 25-year-old daughter and a promi-nent child psychologist. "But there are no

Yet, stimulated by a wealth of recent research and soon-to-be-released Freud letters, scholars are gaining new perspectives on the sometimes secretive Viennese genius who has been, in some ways, the most relentlessly scru-tinized figure in history, beginning with his own heroic self-analysis in 1897.

Taught Patient

For example, it now appears, according to a never-before-published passage of a letter Freud wrote in 1897, that the first practicing psychoanalyst trained by Frend was his patient Emma Eckstein, Apparently Freud taught her analysis, perhaps out of a sense of guilt, after trying to treat her bysteria by arranging for an experimental nose operation that nearly proved latal.

Some of the most provocative new research concerns Freud's crucial departure from the theory he held in the early 1890s, which attributed his patients' neuroses to repressed memories of their sexual seduction as children, usually by their fathers. Later, Freud turned this upside down, absolving the parents and calling the episodes "phantasies" associated with an instinctive infantile Oedipus complex, or at-traction to the parent of the opposite sex. This became a central concept of Freudian psychol-

But some critics now maintain that Freud had it right the first time, and that his shift toward phantasy — in the historic spelling in psychoanalysis — marked a fateful turn for reudianism. Whether Freud scrapped his first theory to escape professional scorn and pro-tect his own father, whom be included among the "perverse," has recently become a matter of intense speculation by two European au-thors as well as leading American Freud schol-

The landmark development is Miss Freud's agreement to allow the first uncensored publication of the intimate letters that Freud wrote from 1887 to 1902 to his dearest friend, confidant and collaborator, Wilhelm Fliess, a Berlin physician and biologist who held Freud in pe-

Private Life

In the letters, which Freud sought to suppress — "I should not like to have any of it come to the knowledge of so-called posterity," be wrote sbortly before he died in 1939 from cancer at the age of 83 in London - the struggling middle-aged nerve specialist formulates virtually all his major discoveries and lays bare many details of his private life.

After the 15-year correspondence that saw only the Freud letters survive for publication in an edited form, the two friends broke bitterly - Fliess once asserting, according to new research by a dogged Freud sleuth, Peter Swales, that Freud was plotting to murder him by pushing him off a precipice during one of

No credence is given to Fliess' fear, which the few scholars who now know of the episode consider a figment of his paranoia. (Asked about the story, Miss Freud, in a telephone interview from London, said, "I hear many stories but I don't pay attention to them.")

In the full letters, according to Dr. Jeffrey M. Masson, a Berkeley, Calif., psychoanalyst who is preparing them for publication, Freud emerges as more complex and buman than in the edited correspondence, published as "The Origins of Psychoanalysis" by Basic Books in 1950.

He agonizes over the primacy of beredity or childhood events in causing neurosis and de-spairs of breaking through his professional isolation. He refers affectionately to his children as "Fratzen" and "Wormen" — brats and worms - and sprinkles around an occasional "meschinge," or "crazy." Freud also provides some vivid case histories, omitted from the edited letters, including a childhood rape tranma that Dr. Masson says gives credence to the seduction theory that Freud later repudiated. A wealth of other material is also coming to light or scheduled for release in coming years. Developments include:

 An agreement being negotiated between the Sigmund Freud Archives. Inc., with an office in Manhattan, and the Library of Congress to open most of the rich Freud deposit to scholars over the next 20 years or so rather than the current outside date of 2151. The first public catalog of the collection's 150,000 items is also being prepared.

The addition to the archives of nearly 400 taped interviews with surviving patients and friends of Freud by Dr. Kurt R. Eissler, a New York analyst who is one of the world's leading

 The first publication of Freud's complete teen-age and post-teen letters to his closest school friend, Eduard Silberstein. The 80 letters, spirited out of Romania several years ago by a Silberstein relative, touch on Freud's first puppy love for a 15-year-old neighbor, Gisels

Fluss, and, simultaneously, ber mother.

The first complete publication of Freud's letters to Karl Abraham, an important disciple and ally; and Ludwig Binswanger, a member of Freud's circle and the father of existential psychotherapy. · Compilation for possible publication of two sets of correspondence considered particu-larly personal and sensitive; the 1,500 letters between Freud and Sandor Ferenczi, a disciple whom Freud analyzed and with whom Freud also broke bitterly, partly over Ferenczi's intimacies with his own patients; and the 2,000 engagement letters exchanged by Freud and his francee, Martha Bernays, of which only about 100 have ever been published or quoted.

 Some potentially controversial speculations by Mr. Swales concerning, among other things, a possible love affair between Freud and his wife's unmarried younger sister. Minna Bernays, who lived with the Freud family for nearly 50 years and with whom Freud took about a dozen trips alone. Carl Jung, Freud's "crown prince" and later adversary, claimed that Minna had confided such an affair to him during his visit to the Freud home in 1907, but most biographers have discounted the story. Dr. Eissler, who says he can prove Jung was lying, is currently writing a paper disputing the allegations.

There is a certain prurient aspect to posterity's curiosity over the intimate dealings of the man whose genius lay in probing the most inti-mate secrets of others. But perhaps nowhere else in history, scholars note, has a scientific discovery been so interwoven with the mental life of the discoverer. Thus, everything that happened to Freud, everything he felt, saw, did and said - and naturally everything that he did not feel, see, do or say - takes on signifi-cance for scholars tracing the development of psychoanalysis.

"It seems to be a sort of renaissance in a way; it's all very exciting," said Mark Paterson, a British literary agent and the executive director of Sigmund Freud Copyrights Ltd., which holds the rights to Freud's works on be-half of his heirs. Since 1979 alone, there have been at least four new biographies along with a continuing stream of articles, monographs and Nowhere was Freud's development laid out better than in the 284 known letters he wrote to Wilhelm Fliess.

The correspondence began in 1887, after Fliess, a nose and throat specialist in Berlin.

traveled to Vienna to attend lectures on the nervous system by Freud, who nt 31 was two years his senior and also Jewish.

An intense friendship quickly blossomed be-tween Freud and Fliess, with the two vigorously exchanging and discussing theories of mental and sexual disorders, including the remarkable "talking cure," an early version of psy-choanalytical methods, that Dr. Joseph Breuer had used to treat a disturbed patient, the pseudonymous Anna O.

Fliess, a charismatic personality with a streak of brilliance, captivated Freud with a refreshing willingness to believe in the sexual euology, or cause, of neurosis at a time when,

as Freud once put it, he was enjoying all the popularity of "a freshly painted wall."
In turn, Fliess found in Freud an eager audience for his unorthodox theories connecting the nasal membranes with the genitals, partic-ularly in women. Claiming to have observed alterations in the nose during menstruation, Fliess, cheered on hy Freud as "the Kepler of hiology," went on to contruct an elaborate theory of "periodicity" linking all functioning to immutable biorbythms based on the 28-day female menstrual cycle and interim 23-day cycles, the two numbers taking on almost ca-balistic significance for Fliess.

He devised, too, a theory of human bisexual-ity that intrigued Freud and contributed ultimately to their bitter break, ostensibly over Freud's carelessness in disclosing the theory to another author. One revisionist Freud biographer, Frank J. Sulloway, a noted science historian, has found scientific validity in some of Fliess' biorhythmic calculations.

Plainly Smitten

Freud and Fliess met for the last time at Achensee in the Alps in the summer of 1900, when, Fliess later wrote, "Freud showed a violence toward me that was at first unintelligible to me." According to research by Mr. Swales, a New York Freud scholar who played a key role in publication of "The Cocaine Papers," an account of Freud's pioneering and reckless experiments with cocaine in the 1880s, Fliess later told his wife and a friend that he feared Freud was bent on killing him out of jealousy.

A similar account was obtained from other sources by Dr. Frank S. Hartman, a Manhattan psychiatrist who is a Freud scholar. However, no one has suggested that the plot existed anywhere but in Fliess' mind.

But for 15 years Freud was plainly smitten with Fliess and what has been called his "Teutonic crackpottery," addressing Fliess in letters as "Dearest" and "Dear One," On three separate visits to the Park Hotel in Munich, years after visiting Fliess there. Freud supposed or after visiting Fliess there. Freud swooned or collapsed in a faint. As he later acknowledged to his official biographer, Ernest Jones: "There is some piece of unruly homosexual feeling at the root of the matter.' Their attachment, however passionate, has never been considered more than platonic but, as Dr. Eissler has put it, "an unsolved enigma still surrounds the relationship of these two

'My Fair Lady' Makes Cinderella Return to Broadway

By Mcl Gussow

NEW YORK — Rev Harrison returned triumphantly Tuesday night to his role as Henry Higgins in "My Fair Lady." 25 years after he first electrified audiences in Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe's masterful musical transformation of Shaw's "Pygmalion." The revival at the Uris Theater should attract a new generation of theatergoers and should also disarm skeptics who lieve that Broadway history cannot repeat itself. Harrison is older, but he is still the quintessential Higgins, who, after all, could never be considered youthful.

Those who saw the actor in the original engagement on Broadway or in the George Cukor movie may be surprised at one fact. He has become a more commanding musical performer, singing more of his lyries and with his mellifluous voice finding an even more melodic lili in the words. The score calls for him to sing a full range of emotions dinary Man" to the self-discovery of "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," surely one of the most subtle and moving love songs

It would be difficult, of course, to recap-ture the exchement of the first Broadway opening, or, in fact, of the closing night some six years later. However, considerable drams was added to the reopening by the last-minute assumption of the utle role by the under-study. Nancy Ringham. Because of illness, Cheryl Kennedy, who played Liza Doolittle during the show's pre-Broadway tour, was forced to withdraw from the cast. Ringham, a young American actress, was rushed in to make her Broadway debut, turning the evening into a Cinderella story within a Cinderella story.

She is an appealing leading lady with a strong voice. However, at the final preview, her performance at times seemed strained, missing a measure of the role's charm and buovancy, so beautifully conveyed by Julie Andrews in the original and also by Audrey Hepburn in the film version. Ringham offers a rather mechanical rendition of "Just You Wait," recovers with "The Rain in Spain," but is unable to overwhelm us with ber transformation from guttersnipe to ducbess. At the same time, her accent wavers from quasi-Cockney to indeterminate mid-Atlantic. One imagines that she will improve as she continues to play this challenging role.

In addition to the book, music, lyrics and Harrison, the major asset of the production is Milo O'Shea, who can take his place along-side other ineffable Alfred P. Doolittles, with the added benefit of his barroom saltiness. O'Shea's philosophical dispute with Harrison about the woes of middle-class morality is a dialogue of the highest Shaw-Lerner caliber.

The musical's other potable appearance is by Cathleen Nesbitt, who returns to Broadway in her inimitable role as 'enry 'iggins's mother. She is a graceful presence, a reminder to her son that his frankness is actually a case of bad manners.

in his staging, Patrick Garland bas acted as guardian of the royal preserve. He has tried to reproduce Moss Hart's production—not only Oliver Smith's scenery and the musical arrangements by Robert Russell Bennett and Phil Lang but also the costumes by the late Cecil Beaton—although the sets and costumes seem sbort of the original elegance.

Some of the music is swallowed up in the immense, badly miked Uris, with sound crackling from unpredictable places, and the lighting (by Ken Billington) is erratic.

In revival, led by Rex Harrison, "My Fair and "endures as a present of the state of th Lady" endures as a paragon of wit. romance and musicality. Every song is a winner.

'Quartermaine's Terms' Capsulizes English School

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

ONDON — From "French Without Tears" across 30 years, through "The Browning Version" to the last catastrophic film-musical rewrite of "Goodbye. Mr. Chips." the late and great Terence Rattigan would return time and again to the classroom in search of some sori of well-made microcosm for the English character.

Now Simon Gray, who has followed Rattigan into Africa and onto the cricket pitch in a latter day version of the same sort of search, also goes back to school. But where his first West End play, "Spoiled," was largely con-cerned with a pupil, his latest, "Quartermaine's Terms," is concerned with the masters. Not C.P. Snow's brigade of ambitious achievers, but a more Rattiganesque bunch of social misfits teaching English to a hunch of increasingly recalcitrant foreigners at the Cull-Loomis School of English at Cambridge in the ear-

We never get to meet Cull, any more than we ever get to meet any of his students. Loomis however is an amiable old neurotic immortally underplayed by Rohin Bailey, neatly sidestepping a minefield of absent-minded-professor jokes to breathe new life into the only cliched character of the entire evening. The other six are masterpieces of accurate and acidulous scholastic observation; there's the young and initially eager Anita (Jenny Quayle), forever lying about ber philandering off-stage husband; the failed novelist (Peter Birch! abandoned by his offstage family; the accident-prone supply teacher desperate achieve permanent status (Glyn Grain): the woolly filmhuff deputy (James Grout) with a neurotic offstage daughter and a chilling ability to turn ruthless; and the middle-aged Melanie (Prunella Scales) who may or may not have helped her ghastly offstage mother on a final trip down the staircase. Above all there is the ineffahly vague St. John Quartermaine, who gives the play at the Queen's Theatre its title, its central focus and in the end its haunting and total triumph. As played by Edward Fox in a state of semi-detachment bordering on trance, he is hull into the furniture of the staff room but not alas able to be of much use in the classroom; otherwise engaged in a perpetual desire to be of help and an utter inability to manage it, he opens and closes a play he also holds together not so much hy what he fails to do as hy what other characters are forever about to fail to We are back deep in the waters of the moon, where tight-lipped failure is acknowledged but never analyzed and where anything of even faint dramatic value happens offstage. For all that. "Quartermaine's Terms" is a masterly job of stagecraft; even character sketches, each com-plete in itself, each interlocked with all of the others, come together to make up the best modem play in town, if you allow that "Translations," though about the Irisb present is in fact securely locked in the Irish past.

For the final offering of Patrick Garland's first season there, Chichester has gone distinctly downmarket and is presenting a joyous tribute to the Crazy Gang cob-bled together by Garland him-self, Brian Glanville and Roy Hudd, who plays Bud Flanagan. For those who grew up with the Gang at the Victoria Palace in the 1950s, aging through our teens while they got younger and younger through their 70s, this is in the nature of a religious revival experience, not least because Chichester has gathered some of the gang's old understudies (Pe-ter Glaze and "Monsewer" Eddie Gray's hrother Billy) to reincarnate their old masters rampaging through stage and stalls.

the Arches" is a hroken-hacked and spineless shambles, uncer-tain whether to be a life of Bud and Ches or a history of the Gang or a survey of prewar variety techniques. A large number of the original Bud-and-Ches songs are left out to make way for a bizarre and irrelevant Florie Forde compilation. All that and more can however forgiven for the utterly magical moment when from backstage they bring out Chesney Allen himself, now 86, for a first-half closer. On the stage where Olivier gave his "Othello". and Plowright her "St. Joan" he got the loudest and longest standing ovation I have ever heard, and rightly. The old gentleman, who had given up Gang warfare in 1945 because of failing health, had outlived all the others to have the last laugh and hear the last applause. Except that I trust it will not be the last; neither Hudd as Bud nor Christopher Tunothy as the stage Ches have the lookalike magic of Bernie Winters and Leslie Crowther in a recent tele-tribute, but Roger Redfarn's wonderfully and I trust intentionally tacky 1940s production (complete with inadequate dancing girls) needs to be seen with Ches back at the Victoria Palace this winter, if they make it home, it'll be the happi-True, the book of "Underneath est of all Christmas treats.

The Clock Runs Out for the Biltmore in New York

was way early when I got there so I just sat down on one of those leather couches right near the clock in the hibby and watched the girls. A lot of girls were home for vacation already, and there were about a million girls sitting and standing around waiting for their dates to show. It was really nice sightseeing, if you know what I mean.

NEW YORK — The sign above
the lobby doors still says
"Under the Clock," and for generations that was where young New Yorkers met their dates, beneath a handsome gill clock atop a white marble archway in the lobby of the Biltmore Hotel. Holden Caulfield met Sally Hayes there. F. Scott Fitzgerald's beautiful people made their stylisb rendezvous under the clock, before they became a lost generation.

Up through the 1950s and '60s, the Biltmore was where well-heeled college students and dehutantes stayed for holiday weekends. It was perfectly situated, half a block west of Grand Central Station and on the fringe of the Broadway theater district, and it was elegant.

No more. The clock disappeared over the weekend, spirited into storage. The leather benches were carted away as well. The airy Palm Court dining room, behind the arch, is a rubble-choked ruin. Next door to it, the Madison Ballroom. where New York's Democratic Party traditionally beld its victory celebrations, has lost balf of its hand-painted ceiling.

The Biltmore is being gutted for conversion to an office building that will house the regional head-quarters of the Bank of America. Preservation groups fought a furious but futile three-day legal battle to save the interior after a demolitioo crew arrived at the botel and began ripping up the interior to the surprise of guests and even the

The Capsule-Room Concept in Japan

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

TOKYO — In some of Japan's I most up-to-date botels, a guest turns off his color television set, switches on the radio for bedtime music, sets his built-in digital alarm clock for the morning, folds his arms behind his head and looks at the ceiling waiting for sleep.

If he stretches his arms upward. he will touch the ceiling: if side-ward, he will reach both walls. The room door is at his feet and his head may touch the facing wall. For a bit over $12 he has earned the right to spend a night in the latest of human habitats, something the Japanese call a kapusuru noteru. The word is taken from English: capsule hotel.

Arrayed on three floors of a bright yellow "pencil building" — a slim style familiar in this land-scarce city — are 72 capsules, almost fully booked every night. The capsules are made of pastel-shade plastic, encasing the tenant snugly. They leave enough headroom to allow sitting up to operate the control console whose buttons com-mand television, radio, air-conditioning, alarm clock and lights.

Seiko Nagao, the owner of the newest of seven capsule hotels functioning in three major cities, describes her property as offering "a space capsule flight on the ground." She likes the imagery, she said, because it suggests the utmost in modernity while removing any suggestion of a coffin.

Mrs. Nagao's botel, like the others of its kind, is intended largely for the businessman who wants to get maximum gain from the per diem allowance be receives — "so he can spend more of it for drink," she explained - or the commuter who has spent so much of the evening drinking with his colleagues. as is the frequent custom bere, that he has missed the last train home.

Consequently, Mrs. Nagao has put up a sign at the entrance barring women. She wants no complication, she explained, and few would be interested anyway. She also formally bars drunks - a restriction more honored in the breach than the observance and men with tattoos, a custom linked with gangsters in Japan.

The hotel, near the big Ueno railroad station, offers vending machines for whiskey, beer, soft drinks and the snacks that go with them, towels and toilet necessities and little else besides the capsules and the traditional common bath. "The capsules are only for sleep-ing," said Mrs. Nagao. "You can enjoy buman life in the fifth-floor lounge." For enjoyment, the lounge offers, in addition to vending machines, two electronic games and a number of neatly aligned upbolstered chairs.

Capsule botels require a minimum of staff, an advantage in this labor-short country. Three full-time employees, aided by two parttimers, suffice for the highly computerized operation of reception and accounting as well as the still-manual tasks of cleaning and changing the bedding. Closed-cir-cuit television cameras disclose on two screens at the reception desk all the capsule-floor activity except for what takes place behind the drawn curtains of the compart-

Isolated and solitary as is the situation of the encapsulated guest, to some citizens of the Tokyo megalopolis of about 30 million people the capsule hotels offer more human fellowship than they enjoy in the cell-like bachelor's apartments where they live.

Pointing to a space occupied solely by eight chairs in front of the reception desk of his First Inn capsule hotel in the satellite community of Mitaka, 40 minutes by train from the center of Tokyo, Kuniyasu Ase, the owner, said it was the social center for lonely men who came there in search of

A Haven for Fishy Types in Connecticut

By Matrhew L Wald

New York Times Service

ORWALK, Conn. — There are thousands of dog kennels, hundreds of boarding farms for borses and lots of neighbors to watch a dog, cat or canary. There are however, few places to which a fish fancier can turn when vacation time rolls along. Hence, the Norwalk Aquarium Fish Hotel.

"We were all booked up by the last week of June," said Peter Falcione, the proprietor, who added 30 tanks last winter to meet demand. But as at any resort, husiness is seasonal. "It will empty out the week after Labor Day, when the kids come home, and stay empty until Thanksgiving, said Falcione, who boasts that the botel is the only such place in the country.

Naturally, because of the crush of business, reservations are required - seven days in advance, with a cash deposit of $1, or sometimes more if a long stay is planned. The notel also requires a water sample from the fish's home tank, so that Falcione can set up a tank with precisely the same chemical balance.

If the guest is a marine fish, the salt level is matched as well Chemical bulances in the tanks are checked every other day, and catering to special diets is a specialty of the bouse. A Passar Angel, a type of angelfish 'rom the waters off Brazil, for example, is on what the botel calls the "modified American plan," no frozen or dry food, only live brine shrimp

This may be a more complicated procedure than that in most botels. Falcione said, but in other ways the guests are easier to handle, "They don't steal the towels." he said. The Fish Hotel started small. The Norwalk Aquarium, a retail store selling tropical and other fish, had followed the practice of many stores in occasionally boarding the fish of a good customer. But Falcione realized that he was gradually losing valuable tank space needed for retailing, so he set up extra tanks in the mery price and becament of his store and offered the mezzanine and basement of his store and offered boarding as a regular service.

The rates vary from $5 a week for the hasic, bare 10-gallon tank to $12 for the 55-gallon model. For those seeking deluxe accommodations for their fish. there are $50-and $60-a-week salt water tanks, with ultraviolet lighting and special water filters.

Statoil Reports Large Gas Find in Arctic

OSLO — Statoil, Norway's state oil company, said Wednesday it had made a natural gas find of considerable size on the continental shelf off northern Norway.

A spokesman said more exploratory wells would have to be drilled to determine the extent of the find, but the field was large and could contain 150 billion cubic meters of gas.

The discovery was made in an area northwest of Tromsoe, which lies well above the Arctic Circle. Testing of a well drilled to a depth of about 2,200 meters (7,200 feet) started a few days ago, he said, but added that the depth of the water could make production technically difficult.

Gallaher Winner of Ofrex Takeover Fight

LONDON — Gallaher Group Ltd., a tobacco subsidiary of American Brands Inc., emerged Wednesday as the winner in the battle for Ofrex Group, a London-based office supplies and industrial concern. The American Brands unit's victory was assured when rival Dennison Manufacturing Co. agreed to sell its 5.49 million shares, or 27.6 percent, of Ofrex, to Gallaher for 190 pence each, or £10.4 million. Gallaher said the Dennison sale plus the shares it had already purchased left it holding 16.7 million Ofrex shares, representing 83.9 percent of the capital.

Gallaher said all conditions attached to its 190-pence-a-share offer for Ofrex will be withdrawn except that the offer will lapse if it is referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The Ofrex board said that following the withdrawal of Dennison, it now recommended shareholders accept Gallaber's offer.

Delhi Fails in Search for Buyer

By Lydia Chavez

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A yearlong auction for Delhi International Oil has ended without a bidder, sending the stock into a spiral.

Shareholders quickly regis-tered their disappointment Tuesday with a flurry of sell orders that pushed the stock down $37.25 to $77.25 on the American Stock Exchange. At the close Wednesday, Delhi gained 50 cents a share.

We all expected something, but no one imagined that there would not be any bidders," said Ellen Greenspan, an arbitrage analyst at Oppenheimer & Co.
"I think this was a case of the market price getting away from the price that potential huyers were willing to pay," said a source close to the negotiations for Delhi.

The company's management put Delhi up for sale last year.

At the time no reason was given, but analysts said that the concern, which is based in Dallas, needed capital to explore its undeveloped acreage in Australia. The deadline for bids was Monday at 5 p.m. New York time.

The break-up value of the company had been placed at $85 a share, a total $646 million, for the company's 7.6 mil-lion shares outstanding, according to Richard H. Barry, an analyst at Eppler, Guerin & Turner in Dallas,

"Because of the run-up in oil prices, there is some tendency among investors to overestimate the actual value of oil and

As recently as June, the shares traded at $72 before jumping to $96.88 on July 21 and then to the high of $115 in the last three weeks, in expectation of a bid that never came.

A short statement released by the company said simply that no bids had been received. However, it added that "proposals for the purchase of cer-tain of the company's domestic and Colombian assets were received and are under review.

The statement said also that Delhi had authorized Morgan Stanley to hold discussions with "those parties who had previously indicated an interest in the company's Australian assets or in the company as a

after the scaled bids were disclosed would not be privy to the data on which the sealed bids were made.

Analysts said there were several factors, including the sealed bidding process that locked in offers, that could have discouraged companies from making bids.

It is difficult, said one investment banker, for companies to assess the value of Delhi's 24 million acres of undeveloped land in Australia. Delhi sold 22.4 million cubic feet of natural gas in Australia last year and has reserves of 752 billion cubic feet, However, most of that gas is under longterm contracts and is selling at about 70 cents per thousand cu-

"Clearly the gas is worth a lot more, but the contracts have no huilt-in procedure that would insure a price rise to its real value," said Mr. Barry.

Analysts also noted the un-certain political situation in Australia that might have been a detriment to the company's sale. The present government has a low standing in the polls and if the Labor government were to regain power it might present some problems for U.S. companies trying to do busi-ness in Australia.

Last year, the company earned $4.8 million, or 62 cents a share, on sales of $27.1 million. Delhi also owns 983,000 barrels of proven U.S. or 1 reserves and 14.9 billion cubile feet of natural gas.

Auto Inventories Up

Corporate profits from current production --- a category that does not include inventory profits — declined 7.9 percent to an annual rate of $187 billion in the second quarter after rising 10.7 percent in the first three months of the year.

The report contained one particularly ominous note — indications of a buildup automobile inventories, according to a department analyst. Despite lagging sales, auto manufacturers kept assembly lines running during the second quarter.

The news broke just after the morning fix, when the metal was set at $433.50. In New York, gold was trading at $437.

During the afternoon, the dollar recovered strongly. In Frankfurt, the dollar finished at 2.50 Deutsche marks, near its high of the day after fluctuating wildly from an opening value of 2.4780 DM. Volume was very thin, dealers said.

But in later trading in New York, the dollar weakened in thin, quiet trading. It was quoted at 2.4862 DM at midday. News of revisions in second-quarter gross national product and inflation briefly depressed the dol-lar, but it recovered later in the morning only to fall again.

The dollar sank to 2.1595 Swiss Francs at midday in New York from an opening 2.1785 at the opening, and to 5.9275 French francs from 5.95.

THE LISLE LETTERS

Edited by Muriel St. Clare Byrne. Six Volumes. $250. University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60637

Reviewed by Lacey Baldwin Smith

THE six volumes of "The Liste Letters" have his the public scene with an extraordinary splash. Why the fanfare? Library shelves are already collapsing under the weight of multivolume collections, and university presses in the United States are grinding out the correspondence of important people with depressing and expensive regularity. In an era of sophisticated information-retrieval systems and skyrocketing printing costs, one wonders why vast collections simply are not calendared, indexed and microfilmed for the benefit of scholarly research. As for the Lisle letters, they were, in fact, calendared 85 years ago.

So why the need to publish in full two-thirds of the papers of an obscure 16th-century English nobleman, his wife and their London agent? They scarcely constitute great literature and only cover the seven years between 1533 and 1540. And why has the enterprise taken so long? The editor, Muriel St. Clare Byrne, began her la-bors almost a half century ago in 1932, and since that date her project has grown from an estimated three volumes to the present six.

Reconstruction and Resurrection

The answer is that "The Lisle Letters" bears a deceptive title, for the 1,677 documents themselves compose only about one-half of the 4,000 pages and 2 million words; the remainder is St. Clare Byrne's voluminous editorial comments. The combination is a new kind of historical production - docuhistory - in which the voice of the past speaks in concert with the imagination of the living, producing a duet between the living editor and the re-cords of the dead. What has been attempted is probably the most intimate, human and detailed reconstruction of any seven-year period in history, a resurrection in which the rhythm of living and speaking is as important as the dramas and tragedies involved in the English Reformation, the forging of the nation-state, and the convulsions and agonies surrounding Henry VIII's married life. As the edi tor says, historians can rebuild the houses of the past, furnish the rooms, store the larders and lay out the garments, but they cannot "persuade the past to send back one individual ghost" unless the "unbelievable dailyness of life" is recreated and cast up against conventional history, the kind that is found in textbooks, monographs and biographies of the great and mighty.

There are not many editors who could have achieved such a marriage of documents and historical editorializing, and possibly the fact that St. Clare Byrne is not a trained historian accounts for the success. She is a literary scholar, a one-time close friend of and collaborator with Dorothy Sayers, an amateur historian and a ignt who b extant letters of the Lisle family "a concentrated and sustained narrative interest, with a tragic and dramatic climax." In fact, her editorial com-ments read rather like stage directions for a performance in which people move in and out with bewildering profusion and the director must be constantly reminded who is related to whom, who has appeared before and what the main story is all about.

There are three central actors. Arthur Plantagenet, Viscount Lisle, "the gentlest heart living," is a likable but somewhat ineffectual nohleman, who in 1533 is appointed by his cousin Henry VIII to be lord deputy of the port of Calais, England's last and be-leaguered foothold on the Continent. His wife Honor is a woman of great force of character, if at times a little "sharp and hasty," who is clearly the power behind her husband and is not popular with the politicians at court because they know that "with a few words and a present of a penny" they can easily "have his lordship's goodwill," as long as "my lady was not in the way." Finally, there is John Husee, "a jewel of a man" and the real hero of the letters—he contributed more than 500 of them—who spends his energy and his patience fronting for Lord and Lady Lisle at court, patching up their desperate finances, looking after their legal and landed interests, and performing a host of odd jobs that make life easy for the entire Lisle family. He is a delightful breath of practical and com-monsense air in the midst of idiotic, aristocratic posing and economic irre-sponsibility; "conform yourself to the world as it goeth now was his constant advice.

Then there are a multitude of green er and lesser characters. The malevolent, psychopathic sovi malevolent, psychopathic soverent rarely appears on stage, but his willing personality casts its baneful shadow across everyone's lives. Thomself. "my lord privy scal," on trols entree to the king's privy chamber, and manipulates events and people like a consummate puppeter. All the major personalities of a flamboy ant and ruthless world put in their events. ant and ruthless world put in their appearance: the Duke of Norfolk & Richard Rich. Mr. Secretary Wriothesley, Bishop Gardiner; the cast reads like a Tudor Who's Who.

The final production is a not confusing, pageant involving the nopes, tears, triviantes, precommended in the season and intrigues of people in every walk of life. The letters probably in the best picture of the day-to-day or eration of Tudor politics ever pained of how patronage, land deals design making and naked ambition worked in terms of personal successes and failures.

The chimax of the story is sheer dis ma, helped along with more than a letter editorial manipulation on the part of St. Clare Byrne. That such white "Gregory Sweet-lips," the "most me chievous knave that ever was bone" hatches the plot that eventually enta-gles Lord Lisle in treason. Cromed turns from a good, if self-serving patron of gentle-hearted Lisle into 1 "backfriend" who engineers the let deputy's downfall by playing on the king's diseased mind and possense; with a trumped-up tale that Lise is planning to betray Calais to the French. And ultimately, the doub dealing lord privy seal himself is de stroyed by the personal hatreds in religious hysteria that floorished a court. It is all strong ment and make splendid reading.

But is it good history? The make is that St. Clare Byrne's history—is approach even more than its scholenip - is almost 40 years out of due Henrician England is presented at a dictatorship, and Thomas Crumel becomes the "perfect robot of the absolute, omnicompetent state." Hear, for all of his psychopathic bubbling. still the sovereign in tune with the silent majority of his subjects and the harbinger of England's future great ness. Although a new, and in per convincing, explanation is given for Lord Lisie's imprisonment for ter-son, the fall of Thomas Cromedia mains as great a mystification as ere. The puppet master suddenly and as expectedly becomes "the Whitelet ostrich, burying its head in the audie avoid recognition of the facts he do not wish to face and accept. There is a great deal that the profe-sional historian can find to entire the use of "missing letters" to prove hypothesis; the extraordinary plac-sion with disproving the charge of adulicry, incest and treason Anne Boleyn and the rather modeled analysis of the nature of the cyclena against her; the picture of the mental ly diseased sovereign which is trotted out whenever the need arises the novery probable redating of Lord Lisks birth and the passionate defense of is doubtful administrative abilities, and finally, the tendency to view and aplain court and national politics for the perspective of Calais.

A New Kind of History Yet, when all the faults are soul and readers are warned that they are in for a great deal of editorial nothering, prompting and cajoling, the search remains that Muriel St. Clare by the has created a new kind of history, a tale told in the dictum of common the common than the life, in which we begin to care short the human shadows emerging from the past. We worry along with Hood that Lord Lisle for a second time going to allow himself to be politically and economically "screwed" by Cromwell. We are disturbed whe Lord and Lady Lisle pay no head to the plight of their grocer, to whose they owe a fortune. We get irritated a Cromwell when he writes one of himself the property of himself the water one of himself the control of himse masterpieces of bureaucratic evasive ness, in which he commits himself in nothing and subtly shifts all potential hlame onto the unfortunate Liste me the Calais council. And we state touched by the final ironic swist of the story. After two years in the Tower's London, Lord Lisle is fully pardoned but the shock of the good news is wormed. He dies the many days of a best much: He dies the next day of a head

BRIDGE

N the diagramed deal, it can be seen that North and South have a fair play for six diamonds. The declarer will need to score a quick club trick, but even if he manages this, there are possible pitfalls.

This was demonstrated at one table after the bidding shown. East made a Lightner double, asking for an unusual lead. West worked this out correctly and led a spade, giving his partner the ruff and insuring a one-trick defeat. The bidding by North and South was based on a strong-club opening with artificial responses. In the replay, North and South conducted a natural suction beginning with one-spade and a two-diamond response. It was now North who was declarer in six diamonds, and there was no quick ruff available to the defenders. The declarer guessed the clubs correctly and picked up the spades to make the slam.

How High Can the Pros Go? 'Oh, About a Billion a Year'

By Gerald Eskenazi New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Craig Swan is said more than twice as much as con Guidry. The Milwankee srewers are lending Robin Yount netween $400,000 and $700,000 a 3.5 percent interest. Steve Stone ets a private room on the road.
With the end of the baseball trike, the players have once again esumed working under contracts hat often include spectacular salaies - but also include divergent acentives and bonuses. These salary figures, for virtual-every major league player, were btained last week by the New ork Times from documents that re available to baseball players ntering salary arbitration.

Distortions

The figures showed some rearkably high-priced players — ach as the Brewers' $600,000-aear pitcher, Pete Vuckovitch the are yet to become household ames. They also showed some ell-publicized salries to have been rroncously reported, or not quite high because they are deferred the 21st century, when inflation build cut them considerably.

The Times also acquired a study f the salaries in the National Basetball Association that was preared for teams to use in contract egotiations. In addition, it ob-imed the annual study of Nation-Football Leaugue salaries, hich is provided by the league to se players association as a guide or negotiations.

To determine the accuracy of e contracts, the players associaon of each league was given a impling of the salaries. In each ise, the figures were verified. For many reasons, baseball has e oddest and most complex conacts. The sport also pays well, an rerage of about $175,000. Five ars ago, it was $51,501; 10 years 10, it was $31,543.

Basically, . . .'

Dave Parker of the Pirates has a ise salary of $300,000 a year on a 70-year deal ending in 1983. He so received a $625,000 signing onus. But in addition to incentive muses, he will be getting more: i,625,000 deferred, payable from housing and car.

come to $1.5 million a year -it is inaccurate to do that when talking about how much those dollars will be worth decades from now. Irving Marks, a certified public accountant and a player agent for several New York Jets, studied the figures from the Parker contract. If I were the owner and took $1 million when the contract began in 1979, and put it away, conserva-tively at 10 percent, I could pay him the $5.6 million for 20 years that's an average of $281,250 a year—and after the 20 years I would have $1,340,811 left over. So basically it's not $5.6 million deferred," says Mr. Marks. "The whole contract is only costing about $1,825,000."

Other contract terms show that some standards of value and performance are not always connected. There is the Ron Guidry-Craig Swan anomaly, for example. Swan, the injury-prone pitcher for the Mets, brought a career record of 45-54 into this season. Guidry, the Yankee star, has had virtually as many lifetime decisions — but his overall record is 76-29.

But Swan, who is eligible to be a free agent, signed a five-year deal in 1980 that pays $425,000 in 1980, $425,000 in 1981, $450,000 in 1982, $525,000 in 1983 and $625,000 in 1984. In addition, he

If his career is ended by injury he would collect every cent until 1984 under a guaranteed contract. Guidry, though, will not be eligible for free agency until this sea-son ends. In 1979 the Yankees signed him to a three-year deal that pays him $125,000 a seaon. He received a $90,500 signing bonus. He has $100,000 in deferred income and $96,000 in insurance and $39,875 in another bonus. That is a total of $701,375 or $233,791 a year.

Less Confidence

But in basketball and hockey, most money is paid the year it is earned. "No one has the same confidence in hockey teams as they do in baseball teams," explains Art Kaminsky, who, with associates around the country, handles about a third of the players in the National Hockey League.

"The newest thing now in basketball is tax-deferred annuities," says Larry Fleisher, the counsel for the NBA Players Association who is also an agent for many players. "But these are paid through an insurance company instead of through a team," Fleisher adds. "Again, the players perceive the money is safer this way.

"Contracts run the gamut in the NBA," says Fleisher of the league whose players average $193,000 a year. There are normal perks. There's a Rolls Royce, Loans are becoming big now, too. They can run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. David Greenwood of the NBA's Chicago Bulls is paying only 4 per-cent interest on a $100,000 loan. He can easily receive $15,000 a year (15 percent) in interest on that loan. His teammate, Artis Gil-more, gets an $80,000 insurance premium paid each year for the first five years of his contract.

Otis Birdsong, now with the New Jersey Nets, benefitted from the NBA's new free-agency rule for the right of first refusal. Birdsong made $165,000 last season with Kansas City When he he Kansas City. When he became available as a free agent, his top offfer was about a million dollars, from Cleveland. Kansas City matched that - and then quickly traded him to the Nets. But what is Birdsong worth? "He's worth," says Bob Woolf, his agent, "whatever anyone wants to pay for him. That's what he's

Pauper's League

By contrast, the National Football League has only one player at the half-million-dollar level, Chicago running back Walter Payton, who recently agreed to a deal worth about $600,000 a year.

The NFL survey showed that last season only one quarterback — Bob Griese of Miami received as much as $400,000, Running back Earl Campbell was in the $300,000 bracket; Jim Plunkett, the Super Bowl quarter-back, was at $180,000.

Ed Garvey, who runs the NFL Players Association, contends that the league's owners will more than double their network television revenue - from less than $6 million to more than $12 million a team — in their next contract which starts after the 1981 season. - in their next contract,

Jockey Carson out for Season

YORK, England — Willie Carson, the jockey for Queen Elizabeth's horses, was in "fair condi-tion and in no immediate danger" following a spill at York Raceeral Hospital said late night. Carson is not expected to ride agaio this year.

Carsoo sustained a fracture to the base of his skull, a broken left wrist and a crushed vertebra in his upper spine Tuesday when his mount, Silken Knot, fell in front of more than half of the other 10 horses during the Yorkshire Oaks

Carson, 38, was burled to the turf and was trampled on by at least six horses as the field was turning for home. He was unconscious for more than two hours. Silken Knot broke both ber forelegs and had to be destroyed. The 11/2-mile race was won by Condes-

American jockey Steve Cauthen. who rode in the race, said, "Willie is lucky to come out of it alive. It was the worst fall I have ever seen. The horses galloped right over him." There were two large cracks in Carson's belmet.

Willie is seriously burt, but we have no reason at this time to suppose his career is in jeopardy," said Dr. Michael Allen, senior medical advisor to the British Jockey Club.

The four-time British champion had ridden 114 winners this season - 11 more than Lester Piggott, who is in second place in the standings. In his 20-year career, Carson has ridden more than 1,900 winners.

The Moral Majority And Banana Bread

WASHINGTON — "You know what confuses me?" said Pfizer as we were watching the girls in their hikinis do their stuff on the beach

What's that?" I asked him. "Why do they always link sex and violence together? Every time the Moral Majority or any other minority discuss evils of the day, they make it sound like vou can't have one without the other. This is particularly true of people who want to censor what we see or read.

2 Buchwald, trouble with violence — I don't like it and I think there's way too much of it for the good of the country.

"And there may be a lot more unnecessary sex than there has to be, when it comes to entertaining the masses. But I don't see why they both have to be attacked in the same hreath." "Well, what would you link with sex?" 'Banana hread." Why banana hread?" I asked.

Elephant Follows Hannibal's Route

The Associated Press FRANKFURT - Eleven British researchers led a circus elephant across 90 miles of the Alps to retrace part of the route taken hy Hannibal 2,000 years ago, the leader of the expedition reported.

Wolf Zeoner, a Cambridge University biologist, said that the scientists and historians who made the 10-day trip were hoth researching the feat of the Carthaginian general and trying to learn more about the physiology of elephants. Hannihal led an army of elephants and men over the Alps in about 218 B.C. in an attempt to subdue Rome. Zeoner said he was planning a six-elephant tour next year over a longer route.

Mena, a 11/2-ton pachyderm on loan from a circus, covered an average of 15 miles per nine-hour day over passes as high as 7,590 feet, Zeoner said.

"I happen to like hanana bread, and I also happen to like sex. I don't consider banana bread any more violent than sex, providing the other person has no objection.

You miss the point. The people who are in the censoring husiness would get nowhere if they said they were against sex and hanana hread. They re unlinkable."

"So are sex and violence," Pfizer said. "Now if they want to attack rape and violence, then I might join their club. I might even go along with their reservations about very young teen-agers involved in sex. What I think is wrong is that by generalizing and putting sex and violence together they're making people believe that if you're indulging in one you're committing

"Would you object to sex and frozen yogurt?" I asked him. "Why? Does frozen yogurt lurn vou on? "It does," I admitted. "Every time I see a pretty girl on the beach I think to myself, 'I wish I had a frozen yogurt.

"Well, at least frozen yogurt isn'i a violent act, unless you push it in someone's face."

"If I had a frozen yogurt I would never resort to violence," I assured him.

"How about linking sex with flying a kite," Pfizer said. "I don't believe the Moral Ma-jority would do it," I told him.

They see sex as a violent act." "Maybe that's their problem," Pfizer said. "Anyone with an unhappy sex life is prone towards vi-

"Well, if everything you say is true, what can just two of us do about it besides look at girls in their bikinis?"

"Not much," he said. "Let's find a refreshment stand that sells hanana hread and frozen yogurt." What good would that do?"

"It would be making a nonviolent statement about sex, which everyone on this beach seems to have on their minds."

Excising Ghosts of Nazi Germany

By Nan Robertson

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — One fog-shrouded Sunday in No-vember, 1978, Wendelgard von Staden returned for the first time in many years to her family's farm in the southwest of West Germany. She saw a cemetery that had not existed before. There were many tombstones, hut on most of them there were only numbers. One said: "Saul Silvermann, bora in Random, died here in 1945."

It was then that Mrs. von Staden decided she would make public the memories that had haunted her for more than 30 years, embodied in the account sbe had written that year for herself and for her children alone. "I will give in to the publisher's request," she thought "Otherwise, who will remember why these stones are here?" They are all that is left of the concentration camp installed on the family farm in 1944.

Her mother, Irmgard von Neurath, and Wendi, then 18, did their best to help the prisoners. When World War II was over, a French military judge told Mrs. von Neurath, according to her daughter: "You are one German who helped to save civilization. You have acted honorably and

Seven Printings

Mrs. von Staden's little book, called "Darkness Over the Valley: Growing Up in Nazi Germany," has created a furor and gone through seven printings in West Germany, where it was published in 1979. Her memoir was published in the United States this spring. It has been hailed in both countries for its rare frankness about the Nazi era, on which almost all Germans of her generation have been silent, and for the simple beauty of its writing. It was written at white-hot speed in Washington, where Mrs. von Staden's husband, Berndt, was the West German ambassador from 1973 through 1979.

She is a handsome woman with fluffy, silver-gilt hair and deep brown eyes. It was clear the other day that her emotions were still very close to the surface. During an interview in the offices of her publishers, Ticknor &

Irmgard von Neurath; her daughter, Wendelgard von Staden.

Fields, Mrs. von Staden's voice hroke and her eyes misted several times as she spoke of her mother, her brother and the horror she finally bore wimess to in print.

"What I saw - the camp stuck out in my mind like a mountain of ice that would not melt," she said. "I wanted some-how to get rid of it, to get over it. It played a very hig part in my inner life for decades. It worked in me for 30 years and I wrote it in three weeks. I couldn't do it before. Somehow, I needed my emotions to be on an even keel."

The mother is the heroine. Mrs. von Staden described her background as "sort of Wagnerian": castles on the Rhine, Prussian generals, aristocratic "vons" galore and Russian prisoners from World War I for whom she cared and who taught her the

The young Irmgard read Marxist literature and eventually became a socialist. But she married another aristocrat, Baron Ernst von Neurath, who wanted only to go hunting and paint landscapes on the farm near Stuttgart that his family had owned for 400 years.

This is where the young Wendi spent an idyllic childhood. Her father's brother, Constantin von Neurath, was Hitler's first foreign minister.

"My mother's ways and the peculiar views she held had only served to deepen the rift between the families," Mrs. von Staden said. "She was acutely aware of what was going on. She predicted that Hitler would bring catastrophe and war."

Yet, as a girl, Wendi had been mesmerized by Hitler at a rally in 1937, and swore that she "would die for the Führer if that was what he wanted." Mrs. von Staden recalled that her mother finally became "a very tragic figure." "She saw everything too clearly, too far in advance, and then she had to live it step by step." In 1944 the SS seized a beautiful valley on the estate and built Camp Wiesengrund. Then the first work detachment of prisoners came to the timbered farmhouse. Mrs. von Neurath and Wendi could not believe their

"What I saw was a procession of thin, staggering figures with shaved heads and greenish faces," Mrs. von Staden recalls in her book. "They shuffled along in wooden clogs, their jackets and pants hanging loosely."

There is a terrible description of the starving prisoners fighting and crawling on the ground for a kettle of potatoes. The guards cursed and beat them with rifle hutts, Afterward, Mrs. von Neurath said: "Those people are half-crazed with hunger. We've made them into beasts, into subhuget more work detachments onto the farm so that she could feed them properly. Nonetheless, lines of stretchers wended every day into the clay pit in the valley, and a "strange, foul odor" rose over the farm and the village. The inmates told of other Nazi camps where "many thousands" had died. Those who survived Wiesengrund told the liberating French forces of Mrs. von Neurath's acts of mercy.

Diplomatic Career

The daughter went on to travel and study widely: at the Univer-sity of Tübingen, the Ecole des Sciences-Politiques in Paris and the University of Southern California. She pursued a career in West Germany's diplomatic ser-vice and was first secretary at the West German Embassy in Washington. She became Mrs. von Staden in 1961.

"Mother never recovered from what the Nazis had done, from what we Germans had done," Mrs. von Staden said. "She never had confidence again in the future of our country. My brother, her only son, returned from the war with brain damage. He had fought at the battles of Leningrad and Narva." The von Neuraths sold the farm in the early 1950s. The baron died in 1960, his wife five years later.

'On Sure Ground'

"After the war, nobody in Germany said they were pro-Hitler; you couldn't find a Nazi no mat-ter where you looked," Mrs. von Staden recalled. "People were afraid. But I had experienced the camp; I was on sure ground. The next generation that came of age in the '60s said to their parents: 'Shnt up! We know what hap-pened.' " Now they are willing to isten, and Mrs. von Staden's lectures have drawn packed houses of all ages around Germany.

Some years after the war, someone told her about a dispatch sent from Bergen-Belsen in 1945 by a British reporter who saw the liberation of the camp. It was said to begin: "I have the duty now to report something that is beyond the scope of human understanding."

Mrs. von Staden's voice began to tremble, "And that," she said, "is what it was."

Alan Jay Lerner, 60, Sai PEOPLE: To Wed a Fair Lady, 26 seller - 8.532 for 1961, his fire

American songwriter Alan Jay Lerner has married for the eighth time, the Daily Mail of London reported. The newspaper said the 62year-old Lerner — who wrote the lyries for "My Fair Lady," currently being revived on Broadway (review page 6) — was wed recently to Liz Robertson, 26, the actress daughter of a security officer in the Port of London. Miss Robertson is appearing in a play at the Chichester Festival Theatre, near the couple's honeymoon hotel in a Sussex seaside village, the newspaper said. Lerner met his bride two years ago after Miss Robertson was given the lead role in a London revival of "My Fair Lady."

It's been 10 years in the works and it isn't finished, but Macmiland it isn't inhibited not taking any chances that another publisher might win the British rights to Norman Mailer's new novel, tentatively titled "The Egyptian." In what it described as a "preemptive the company has paid a $120,000 advance for the book without so much as a peek at the outline.

Actress Jaclyn Smith's honeymoon in London was spoiled when she was burglarized of jewelry val-ned at $127,400, her husband, Tony Richmood, says. She has taken it very badly and is very op-set. It has taken the edge off the honeymoon," Richmond said. He said the jewels were family heirlooms - rings, bracelets and a necklace - and were stolen from their London botel suite last week while they were making a television commercial in Birmingham. 113 miles away. Miss Smith is best known for her television role in "Charlie's Angels."

There's been a lot of interest in Richard Nixon's private White House papers, not to mention tapes - but his official papers won't make the presidential best-seller list. The official papers of Nixon's final seven months in office - messages, news conferences and statements - are the worstselling volume of any president's since compilation and publication of presidential papers began with Herbert Hoover. The "Public Pa-pers of the President" is compiled annually by the Government Printing Office, where Stanley Fields said Nixon's 1974 volume has sold only 374 copies. John F. Kennedy is the presidential best year in office, and a total of 23.632. The operators of the Richard Nixon museum in the Clemente.
